Dear New Mexico Interstate Stream Commissioners:

The Gila River is vital to our economy here in southwest New Mexico. It is the last free-flowing, main-stem river in the state and one of the few remaining in the Southwest. Rich in natural and cultural history, the Gila contributes significant economic benefits to our counties through ecosystem services, enhanced property values, aesthetics, recreation and tourism, and scientific and educational opportunities. The Gila supports a naturally reproducing sport fishery and is a birding hotspot of the Southwest.

As business owners in southwest New Mexico, representing over 120 businesses, the Southwest New Mexico Green Chamber of Commerce, and employing more than 400 people, we urge you to approve responsible, cost-effective non-diversion alternatives for evaluation during the 2012 – 2013 assessment phase of the Arizona Water Settlements Act (AWSA) planning process.

We are concerned that a major water development project, such as the three currently proposed under the AWSA, are unnecessary and expensive. Studies show that the regional aquifer contains enough water to supply Silver City for hundreds of years. Deming's 2009 water plan demonstrates that it has acquired enough water rights to meet future demand over the 40-year planning period.

A Gila River diversion and pipeline project would require major infrastructure in the Cliff-Gila Valley and portions of Grant and Luna counties. This project would require a diversion dam and some combination of a huge pumping station, a power station, massive pipelines and/or canal systems and an off-stream dam and reservoir. The projected construction cost is estimated at $325 million – more than double the promised $128 million federal subsidy. The recently completed Animas-La Plata diversion and reservoir cost $500 million, 48% over the original estimate. Taxpayers, local governments, and water users would be tapped to fund the remainder. At a time when federal, state and local budgets are spread thin, a diversion project outstrips our financial resources.

The responsible choice under the AWSA is to implement cost-effective, non-diversion alternatives, such as municipal and agricultural conservation and sustainable groundwater management. Projects such as Grant County's Regional Water Supply, water reuse projects in Deming and Bayard, and municipal and agricultural conservation all proposed under the AWSA planning process is sufficient to meet southwest New Mexico's long-term water needs at a fraction of the cost.

Southwestern New Mexico businesses should not have to pay for expensive water from a diversion and pipeline project when there are more cost-effective alternatives available. Expensive water will hurt our businesses, many of which are still struggling in the aftermath of our national economic crisis.

We have an opportunity under the Arizona Water Settlements Act to satisfy southwest New Mexico's water needs affordably, while at the same time maintaining the Gila River as a natural asset for local agriculture, tourism and recreation. It is critical that we make responsible choices for the long-term sustainability of our local economies.

Sincerely,
